Katwijk, Holland, May 10, 1940: The German invasion of the Low Countries was the advent of a new form of warfare, Blitzkrieg. And Blitzkrieg utilized a number of tactical and operational innovations including the use of airborne troops, troops delivered by parachute and glider. The overall plan was to lay a carpet of airlanded troops across Holland to accelerate the advance of the ground forces. The 22nd Airlanding Division was tasked with capturing the airfields around the Hague. The first wave of transports crossed into Holland early in the morning and made excellent progress against light anti-aircraft fire. Despite this the fierce resistance at the airfields themselves caused heavy casualties. By the time the second wave of the 22nd Airlanding Division arrived, further landings were impossible. The order was given to divert to Katwijk where they landed on the beach, roads and open fields. The Dutch had foreseen this eventuality and had erected obstacles in these areas. Dutch troops quickly seized the initiative and caused heavy casualties against the invaders. This put the German invasion in jeopardy. However, the intrepid fallshirmjäger would soon rebound and defeat the Dutch.
